Choosing Classic Items

My go-to classics, chosen for their stories

I used to be swayed by trends and feelings when choosing clothes and accessories, but recently, I have started choosing classic, well-made items that I can wear and cherish for years. The store staff often tell me about the care that goes into the materials and designs, as well as the stories behind their brands. The more I learn about the brands and the passion and vision of the manufacturers, the more I adore the products.

Choose well-crafted shoes

Paraboot is a footwear brand founded in France in 1908. While preserving traditional craftsmanship, the brand continues to captivate people around the world with its exceptional quality and comfort. In particular, the “MICHAEL,” regarded as the brand’s signature model, remains an enduring classic among Tyrolean shoes. While the thick sole gives the model a casual feel, its elegant silhouette also pairs beautifully with more refined attire. The wax-treated leather is highly water-resistant and gradually molds to your feet with wear. Take your time breaking them in, to nurture a pair that is uniquely yours.

Choosing Classic Items

Exceptional comfort and a beautiful silhouette to enrich everyday life

No one should compromise on silhouette, comfort, or vintage appeal. That's why we would like to introduce YANUK's top-line "PREMIUM²" series, in which sophisticated L.A. design meets Japanese craftsmanship. The brand's new, uniquely developed fabric provides 360° stretching, enabling two seemingly contradictory qualities: exceptional comfort and an authentic vintage aesthetic. The timeless, straight-leg cut features clean lines and a pattern that makes your hips appear higher, creating a flattering look from behind as well. Having your own pair of these exceptional jeans will bring some additional joy and fun to your everyday wardrobe.

Appreciate the character of linen as it grows richer over time

For some garments, once you slip them on, the comfort makes you want to keep wearing it for years to come. This blouse from nest Robe, a brand committed to creating clothing under the concept of “Slow Made in Japan,” is one such piece. Rather than prioritizing efficiency and speed, the brand crafts each piece slowly and with great care, and advocates for the value of the wearer cherishing and nurturing items over the course of many years. This classic stand-collar ruffle blouse is made from fine linen woven by artisans on Japanese looms. It grows softer each time you wear it, conforming to your skin and developing an increasingly rich character. Wear it on its own in fall or layered with knitwear in winter. You will cherish this piece more deeply with each passing year.

Gathering the Essentials

Enjoy cooking with utensils you can rely on for years

When choosing kitchen utensils, I look for items that are easy to use and that I can appreciate for years to come. Naturally, I also like to keep my kitchen spotless, so ease of care is also important. The sharpness of knives is especially crucial. Sharp knives reduce strain and make cooking more enjoyable. After experimenting with various styles of tableware, I have come full circle and settled on simple white pieces that can complement any dish.

For the items you will use every day, choose those that you will cherish most

Sometimes, even the smallest accent can make everyday life feel richer. The rice bowl you use each day is one such example. This kurawanka-style rice bowl features fine, decorative ridgelines arranged diagonally, and is designed for everyday use. The bowl was created through a collaboration between the Hasami-yaki pottery manufacturer Toubou Ao and the retailer BASIC AND ACCENT, and features decorative ridges carved line by line by skilled artisans. Its solid color allows the texture to shine through, making it a timeless piece you will never tire of using. The rich variations in the glaze also make choosing a one-of-a-kind bowl of your own part of the fun.

Living with Cherished Treasures

Spend time with storied items

I am fond of vintage items and love my British butterfly table and Taisho-era cupboard. I am drawn to antique pieces that feel as though they have a story to tell, and that bring forward the love of those who once used them. In interior design, vintage items provide a stylish foundation when paired with the subtle touch of current trends. I enjoy creating my own balance between old and new.

A soft glow for long autumn evenings

Switching on a light can imbue a familiar space with an entirely new character. That is the power of lighting. “Neron” is a glass pendant lamp inspired by the image of clouds floating in the sky. Each piece is finished by hand by skilled artisans, and their irregular, undulating, cloud-like forms emit light in unpredictable patterns. Part of the charm lies in seeing how the display changes depending on the angle of view and how the light passes through the glass. The exceptional design gives each piece a commanding presence as a decorative object that enhances the space even when switched off. On long autumn nights, settle in with a book beneath the playful glow.

A comfortable seating design that evolved in shoemaker workshops

The SHOEMAKER by Denmark's WERNER is a masterpiece of Scandinavian furniture design. Its distinctive name pays homage to shoemakers who spent long hours seated and carved their seats to fit the contours of their bottoms for greater comfort. The three-legged design is inspired by the stools used by dairy farmers when milking cows. Its highly refined form gives the impression of a sculptural object. It is lightweight and easily enjoyable anywhere in your home, from the entryway and kitchen to the bedroom. The smooth wooden finish develops an even richer color with use, making you love it all the more. As you reflect on its origins, you will want to treasure this masterpiece for years to come.
